

ALASKA STATE CHILD CARE FACT SHEET

State Child Care Assistance Policies: Alaska

- Income eligibility limit: In 2011, a family of three in Alaska could qualify for child care assistance with an annual income up to $54,288 (293 percent of poverty, 77 percent of state median income).¹
- Waiting list: Alaska had no waiting list for child care assistance as of February 2011.
- Parent copayments: In 2011, a family of three with an income at 100 percent of poverty ($18,530 a year) receiving child care assistance paid $45 per month, or 3 percent of its income, in copayments. A family of three with an income at 150 percent of poverty ($27,795 a year) receiving child care assistance paid $115 per month, or 5 percent of its income, in copayments.
- Reimbursement rates: In 2011, Alaska's reimbursement rates for child care providers serving families receiving child care assistance were below the federally recommended level—the 75th percentile of current market rates, which is the level designed to give families access to 75 percent of the providers in their community—for all categories of care other than infant and toddler care.²
 - Alaska's monthly reimbursement rate for center care for a four-year-old in Anchorage was $650, which was $40 (6 percent) below the 75th percentile of current market rates for this type of care.
 - Alaska's monthly reimbursement rate for center care for a one-year-old in Anchorage was $850, which was equal to the 75th percentile of current market rates for this type of care.
- Tiered reimbursement rates: In 2011, Alaska did not pay higher reimbursement rates for higher-quality care.
- Eligibility for parents searching for a job: In 2011, Alaska allowed parents to qualify for or continue receiving child care assistance for up to 80 hours while searching for a job.³
